Voiceless Cancer Survivor “Speaks Out” Against Tobacco

Former smoker speaks with voice box to tell Granite Peak teens about dangers of addiction

- What: Terrie Hall can’t swim, blow her nose or speak – and she never will. Hall lost her voice box, breathes through a hole in her chest, and suffered through radiation and surgeries thanks to tobacco addiction. The Utah Department of Health (UDOH) TRUTH Campaign and Utah’s local health departments are bringing Hall from her home in North Carolina to Utah for a statewide tour of high schools.
- Who: Terrie Hall, cancer survivor
Utah Department of Health anti-tobacco experts
Alternative high school students
- When: Tuesday, April 12, 2011
10:30 a.m.
- Where: Granite Peaks High School Auditorium
501 East 3900 South
Salt Lake City
- Why: Ninety percent of adult smokers begin lighting up before age 19 and one in three will eventually die of their addiction.
